News Bits

Student memorial fund established

A memorial fund has been established for WSU student Joanna Weglage, who was recently killed in a car accident. The fund has been established through the Miamisburg Band and Guard Boosters Association, and donations can be made at University College.

WSU to host NASA research discussion

Mary Anne Frey, former NASA program scientist and emerita professor of aerospace medicine at WSU, will speak on medical contributions made by the NASA program on Feb. 25, from 5:30 p.m. until 7:30 p.m. in the Fordham Health Sciences Library in the Medical Sciences Building on the WSU campus. The program, entitled "NASA and You: Inner Health and Outer Space," will discuss NASA's contributions to the diagnosis and treatment of cancer, diabetes, cardiovascular disease and musculoskeletal disorders. It will also address how NASA is predicting deadly diseases and the use of telemedicine, which uses telecommunications technology to disseminate medical services and information.

Concentration camp survivor Luisa Lang Owen to hold book signing

Owen will discuss her experiences, which she put into her memoir, Casualty of War: A Childhood Remembered, providing readers with a look at ethnic cleansing by Germans in Yugoslavia towards the end of World War II. Owen, a retired professor of art education at WSU, will hold a book signing for her novel on Feb. 25, at 4 p.m. in the WSU Educational Resource Center, 116 Allyn Hall. The book signing is sponsored by the College of Education and Human Service.

Dayton Police Department and Highway Patrol enhance traffic safety

The Dayton Police Department and Ohio State Highway Patrol have partnered to increase safety, decrease congestion and improve commute times on I-75 in Dayton. As part of this program, the Patrol will cover I-75 between milepost 51 and 55 for an initial 30 day period beginning March 1st. In the first nine months of 2002, 75 people were injured in crashes on I-75 between milepost 51 and 55 in Dayton.

Survey, faculty online evaluations

Ty Swonger
Staff Writer

Student Government sought further input on the possibility of publishing student evaluations online with the release of a survey concerning faculty opinion.

The survey, which operated on terms of anonymity, concluded its ten-day run on the SG website last week.

According to chief of staff Brian Hendricks, the results of the survey have been mixed.

Hendricks, along with input from SG president Chris Myers, head of academic affairs, Jessica Westgerdes, senator, David Green and assistant provost Bill Rickert, developed the questions that appeared on the survey.

Some featured questions addressed support of course evaluations being made available for student review, where the faculty would prefer the results of the evaluations to be posted and the way the evaluations would affect enrollment in classes.

"As of Thursday, we had nearly 100 responses, which is about one-fourth of the faculty," said Hendricks.

One of these responses came from associate professor of French and comparative literature, Dr. Mari O'Brien. "I cannot fathom how the current student evaluation could be of use to students. Theoretically, however, a well designed course

associate professor evaluation could potentially benefit everyone," said O'Brien.

According to her, if students want to inform themselves on the style of teaching a professor uses, the student should locate the professor's philosophy of teaching.

"Face-to-face meetings are a fabulous way for a student to get a sense of what the professor and the course will be like," said O'Brien.

In the College of Liberal Arts an effort to make course syllabi available prior to registration is currently in development for this exact reason, she said.

"Faculty are now being asked to routinely list course objectives on their syllabi, since we recognize that this information is important to students as they review online syllabi to make their decisions," said O'Brien.

Associate professor of mechanical and material engineering Dr. Joseph Slater is undecided about the publishing of the evaluations.

"As far as for students, I think the written comments are the most useful. The statement can be useful as an indicator of how much effort the student made and thus qualify the sentiment of the statement," said Slater.

According to Hendricks, SG is currently still in discussion on whether or not to provide the service by itself or through a third party organization, as well as whether or not to host it on ROX.

Natural gas leak in Union Market

Ty Swonger
Staff Writer

WSU Public Safety, along with Physical Plant employees and the Fairborn Fire Department, responded to a call from the Student Union about a natural gas leak on Thursday.

According to director of Public Safety, Simone Polk, the Fairborn Fire Department activated the fire alarm at approximately 11:27 p.m., in order to evacuate the Student Union.

The doors to the building were opened and industrial fans were put in place to aerate the area as fire fighters inspected the Union Market (the Student Union cafeteria) for the source of the leak.

The leak was traced to a gas grill in the Union Market. Fairborn Fire Department turned off the grill, consequently stopping the leak. The Fairborn Fire Department, Physical Plant and Public Safety confirmed there was no danger and the alarms were shut off approximately one hour after the initial sounding.

Polk commended the efforts of WSU employees for their reaction to the rare event of the leakage.

"They did the most appropriate thing under the circumstances. I'd advise community members that if they smell gas to immediately contact Public Safety at 911 and evacuate the building for their safety."

Public Safety contacted Union Market manager Pam Daniels, informing her that the grill needed to be serviced in the near future.

Helen Lane, WSU custodial employee, was treated and released by Fairborn paramedics for symptoms related to exposure to the natural gas.

"I was working and I started to feel light-headed and my vision began to blur so I kept going out to get air and drinking water," said Lane.

Community service fair

Jessica Garringer
Volunteer Writer

To celebrate National Random Acts of Kindness Month, Student Life gave an informational fair for students and employees of WSU, which highlighted various community service activities that are offered within surrounding communities.

There were 18 different agencies involved in the fair including March of Dimes, United Way, Project Read, Special Wish, Ronald McDonald House and The Wesley Center. Each organization set up their own booth and gave brochures and information to interested individuals.

"I felt the fair was very successful," said Tonya Mathis, assistant director of Student Life. "From the feedback I received from the agencies involved, I got a sense that there was a good turnout and that they were very pleased with the results."

With the various agencies that attended the fair, both students and employees have a variety of options available to meet the preferences of each individual. Through The Special Wish Foundation volunteers are able to put mailings and other packages together to help terminally ill children receive their last wish to come true.

Youth program specialist Monica Walker-Floyd and program coordinator Leon Hardin represented the Dayton Urban League at the community service fair.

With Ronald McDonald House, individuals can help clean and prepare the rooms that parents stay in while their children are visiting there.

European nations divided over Iraq issue

European Union believes force should be a "last resort" in disarming Iraq

Daniel Rubin
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Members of the European Union ended an emergency summit in Brussels on Monday still divided over a U.S.-led war against Iraq, but saying force should be a "last resort" in disarming Saddam Hussein.

France and Germany stood firm in their position against an imminent war, while Great Britain remained squarely with the United States in calling for action soon. The EU leaders did concede that the U.S. military buildup in the region had forced Saddam to cooperate with U.N. weapons inspectors far more than he had in the past, and they called for further inspections to ensure Iraq's disarmament.

"Iraq has a final opportunity to resolve the crisis peacefully," by cooperating fully with the United Nations and disarming, the 15-nation

"There is not a fixed deadline in the resolution, but at some stage the council may decide that we are wasting our time and we should call a halt to inspections."

—U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan

EU said in a formal declaration at the summit's end.

The statement is not likely to please Washington, which wanted a firmer declaration of EU support for military action against Iraq.

The statement also papered over differences rather than resolved them, and it shows the difficulty the EU has in trying to speak with one voice in foreign affairs. It left open the question of whether France would exercise its veto in the U.N. Security Council if faced with a resolution authorizing war.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair expressed frustration with the group's stand that inspectors need more time to do their job, even though it added the caveat that inspectors "cannot continue indefinitely in the absence of full Iraqi cooperation."

"The time you need is the time to make a judgment,"

Chuck Kennedy | KRI Campus

President Bush spoke with French President Jacques Chirac in the Rose Garden following their meeting in the Oval Office last November. Bush met with him again on Feb. 13 to discuss the situation with Iraq.

Blair said. "Is he cooperating or not?"

Blair, Bush's closest partner in the Iraq crisis, said Iraq was in "material breach" of U.N. Resolution 1441, which calls for Iraq to disarm or the Security Council would deliver "serious consequences," including military action.

Blair's position was seriously undermined by the massive anti-war demonstrations in London and other European capitals over the weekend.

"There is not a fixed deadline in the resolution," U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan said, "but at some stage the council may decide that we are wasting our time and we should call a halt to inspections."

French President Jacques Chirac, while not ruling out war, said it was premature to talk about military action.

Peer 2 Peer promotes relationship responsibility

Justin Gorman | The Guardian

Toyette Sullivan and Andrea Bishoff, members of Peer 2 Peer, an organization of trained students whose focus is to educate others about alcohol, drugs and sexual health, provide students with educational resources.

Jake Stanley
Assistant News Editor

WSU's Peer 2 Peer organization held events promoting relationship awareness with a somewhat of a disappointing turnout. "We promoted the activities via flyers, bulletin boards, easels, faculty, staff and student organization list servers. I believe we reached some students but not the vast majority of the campus," said Toyette Sullivan, assistant director of student life and Peer 2 Peer advisor.

Romance Responsibility Week coincided with National Sexual Responsibility Week that is sponsored by the Bacchus and Gamma Peer Education Network sponsors, the largest student health organization in the world. They provide programming, training and educational resources to colleges and universities and other health and wellness organizations. "Our primary goal with programming for Romance Responsibility Week was to encourage safe and healthy relationships among WSU students. Our programs addressed sex education, responsible dating, sexual assault awareness and sexually transmitted infection prevention," said Sullivan. The week has been promoted on WSU's campus since 1996 and the Peer 2 Peer organization has been established since 1994. This year experienced a drop in attendance at the events.

Sullivan noted Tuesday's "Can I Kiss You" presentation as one of the most poorly attended functions. The goal of the function was to challenge students methods of dating and encourage proactive communication within relationships. "In the future we would need to do better marketing, and possibly a better location," said Sullivan.

Events during the week included "Who Wants To Be A Sexpert?" held on Monday. The forum was that of a gameshow similar to "Who Wants To Be A Millionaire" where prizes were given for contestants knowledge of smart relationship choices. On Friday, a brief HIV/AIDS awareness speech was given by Reverend Richard Young. Young asked the audience if they knew anyone with the virus and he received no response. Young then informed the attendees that "One in about every three-hundred people are infected with HIV."

Students wishing to get involved with promoting awareness or finding more information may contact Peer 2 Peer for further information. "The office of Student Life also has many resources that can be used regarding these subjects such as brochures and videos," said Sullivan.

Dartmouth professor lectures on race and gender research

Valerie Lough
Staff Writer

Dr. Deborah King recently gave an informal preview of her latest race and gender research at the WSU Women's Center. King is an associate professor of sociology at Dartmouth College and has published a number of articles on African-American women.

King gave an overview of a project aimed at studying historical representations of race and gender in prisons. Her study focuses on the images of prisons and male and female inmates on late 19th and early 20th century postcards. "I have a hypothesis that the state has a vested interest in promoting a particular kind of representation and image of corrections," said King.

King discussed the messages she gleaned from the photographs and the implications of race and gender representation. She said that the images may have been created to promote the idea of rehabilitation. King spoke about the differences between the images of men and women and the absence of images of African-American women.

"I'm interested not just simply in women but in fact how gender is represented," said King.

She explained that in the photographs, women are not visible in the same way that men are. Women's faces aren't shown, their backs are turned and women are often distant from the camera. In the images in which women are active, King explained, the women are engaged in traditional female roles such as weaving and hairstyling.

According to King, by comparison, the men in the photographs are engaged in building and working in ways that participate in the industrial economy and there are no images of women in classrooms.

King addressed the stigma attached to female inmates that may be suggested by the photographs. "There's a sort of double stigmatization that occurs for women not just because they've violated the law, but they have violated gender role expectations," said King.

"For women of color, there is even more stigmatization that occurs because they have never been expected to fit those traditional gender roles."

King is best known for her 1983 Signs article "Multiple Jeopardies, Multiple Consciousness: The Context of Black Feminist Ideology," and her work with Meridians, Journal for Women of Color.

"This is part of the Women's Studies Lecture," said Kelli Zaytoun Byrne, Director of WSU Women's Center. "We think her research is cutting edge."

Lee Ann Kline | The Guardian

Dr. Deborah King (on left) met in Millett Hall on Wednesday with a woman's study group to discuss prison conditions and the role that race and gender have had on inmates' experiences.

Professor speaks on Florida Everglades restoration

The lecture was part of WSU's annual seminar hosted by the Department of Geology

Valerie Lough
Staff Writer

In a recent address at WSU, professor Jean Bahr outlined a project for the restoration of the Florida Everglades.

"Hydrogeologists can and should be playing an increasing role in a variety of projects that are examining ecosystem restoration," said Bahr.

Bahr, a geology and geophysics professor at the University of Wisconsin, led the special seminar that is hosted annually by WSU Department of Geological Sciences and sponsored by the Geological Society of America Hydrogeology Division. Bahr is the chosen speaker for the 2003 Birdsall-Dreiss Distinguished Lectureship Tour that visits universities, including WSU, and public and private research organizations each year.

Among the three case studies that Bahr presented in her discussion of groundwater research was the federally-mandated Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan (CERP).

The plan includes efforts to manage, recover, store and treat waterflow, particularly from Lake Okeechobee in south Florida. The $7.8 billion project aimed at preserving and restoring the water resources of the Everglades was approved by the Water Resources Development Act of 2000 and is now underway.

Bahr addressed some ramifications of the plan, such as the effect that underground water storage would have on regional groundwater flow and problems with recovery.

"(The stored water) may not take the same path out that it took in," said Bahr. "The bottom line is, will that water be suitable for the ecosystem once it's pumped back out?"

According to Bahr, the need for hydrogeologic expertise will be critical over the next two decades and that collaboration between those in the physical, geological and social sciences is essential to the preservation of the Everglades and other endangered ecosystems.

"(Bahr's) knowledge is unbelievable," said Kim Morris, an environmental health student. "What she is doing is very interesting. The information she gave about Florida was amazing."

Bahr has a bachelor's degree in geology from Yale and is chair of the National Research Council Committee on Restoration of the Greater Everglades Ecosystem.

Michigan admissions

Maryanne George
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Although a massive East Coast snowstorm forced a change in plans, University of Michigan President Mary Sue Coleman marshaled the troops supporting University of Michigan's race-conscious admissions policies Monday via satellite television.

Retired Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, former Secretary of Defense William Cohen and DaimlerChrysler Corp. were among the newest soldiers joining the university's side, announcing Monday that they were filing briefs with the U.S. Supreme Court.

More than 60 briefs from more than 300 organizations are to be filed with the court, along with the university's own briefs, by midnight Tuesday.

Coleman praised the size and diversity of the University of Michigan's supporters.

"They represent universities, faculty, more than 13,000 law students, over 60 Fortune 500 corporations, the AFL-CIO, the UAW, the American Bar Association and the Association of American Medical Colleges, dozens of civil rights and religious organizations, 16 states, members of Congress and more than two dozen high-ranking military and civilian defense officials," Coleman said.

The court is scheduled to hear oral arguments in the two lawsuits filed against the University of Michigan on April 1. Three white students sued in 1997, claiming they were denied admission to the undergraduate and law schools in favor of less-qualified minorities.

The high court's ruling, expected by June, could alter college admissions nationwide.

Coleman was scheduled to be the keynote speaker Monday at the American Council on Education's annual meeting in Washington, D.C. Afterward, educators, politicians, retired military officers, labor leaders and corporation presidents were set to release legal briefs supporting the university's defense of its race-conscious admissions policies.

But the storm that closed Washington's airports and dumped up to 2 feet of snow on the capital sent Coleman scurrying to a television studio at Crisler Arena on the University of Michigan's Ann Arbor campus, where she addressed the luncheon via satellite. Then, nine spokespersons phoned in from around the country for a teleconference conducted by Coleman.

President Bush criticized the University of Michigan's policies. U.S. Solicitor General Ted Olson filed a brief on Bush's behalf, bringing the total filings of opposition groups to about 20.

WORLD CLASS

The Raj Soin College of Business is Raising the Bar on Business Education

Understanding business principles is not enough to succeed in today's complex global marketplace. CEOs say they're looking for much more: employees with a global perspective, who demonstrate analytical thinking, computer proficiency, ethical decision-making and teamwork.

Through top quality corporate, alumni and student advisory boards, and other stakeholders, we continually fine tune our undergraduate and graduate programs to meet the changing needs of business. Wright State continues to lead the way. In fact, our undergraduate business programs and MBA program were first in the Miami Valley to be accredited by AACSB International, the highest accrediting body for business colleges in the U.S. And our Master of Accountancy program is the only one in the region accredited by AACSB.

Letters to the Editor

In defense of Christian men, women's rights

Nick Nye

Senior Religion

Mr. Smith, your "radical" views were most impressive. I found it amazing that you would write such statements with such little knowledge of the Bible itself, let alone Christianity. First let me point out what theologian Duane Litfin writes in "Theological Issues in Contemporary Feminism" (1982, pg. 334).

What follower of Jesus could ignore the fundamental injustice of laws that work to the disadvantage of women as women?

Who could fail to be outraged at the prospect of a woman being paid a fraction of what a man earns for doing the same work?

What fair-minded person is not dismayed when reminded that it has only been within the life spans of many living Americans that women have been thought-worthy of the vote?

And what believer has not discovered blind spots within his own perspective that, on closer inspection, caused embarrassment and repentance?

Any who are willing to see can find much in the feminist movement to be praised and supported.

As a Christian, I really struggled with the theory of feminism. I assumed that it was women rising up to take over men. But in many ways feminism is a response to Biblical principles that you obviously haven't read: Galatians 3:26-28, 2 Corinthians 5:17 and countless other passages that deal with the liberation of male and female.

Women's rights then are not 'sin.' But here is to you who call yourselves men (especially Christian men).

Women are to be treated as equals because that is what the Bible, our foundation, teaches. Stand up for women, encourage them and work side by side with them just as Jesus and Paul did (John 1:12-13, Acts 18:26). Liberation for everyone is in Jesus Christ.

In view of all this, God's ruling against the woman in Genesis 3:16 cannot be viewed as the source of hierarchical social order. Rather, it points to the truth that with the opening of sin, the hierarchical order remains from Genesis 2, but sin's consequence will now be experienced within that order. For this reason, God's account in Genesis 3:16 was merely a celestial portrayal of what would transpire, male domination and oppression as opposed to loving headship, not a consent which obedient servants of God should attempt to complete.

Female response to "You're a sinner"

Leanne D. Sunderman

Senior-Liberal Arts

This letter is in response to a letter written by Michael Smith in the Feb. 12 issue of The Guardian.

It grieves my God-fearing, female soul to hear you utter such words of deceit. I indeed am a sinner; an imperfect woman who stands in need of grace. Please understand that it is not my intention to publicly condemn or castrate you, but to merely present a few obvious truths.

Woe to you, Mr. Michael Smith, as you have misrepresented an entire population of believers in Christ! The poor Christian men of our world who are indeed treating women with respect and dignity, serving and honoring them, how blatantly you have condemned them! How blatantly you have condemned women such as myself who are not only involved in the women's rights movement, but also have found more worth and equality in Christ, than this world could possibly offer! There will be hordes of feminists chasing you all of your days, for this published mistake!

To "reserve" oneself a "pleasant spot," after one perishes, is not to be achieved by boycotting women's right's and feminism, anymore than it is achieved by going to church every Sunday, doing good deeds for those around you, or memorizing passages from The Bible; eternal security is not achieved by a list of do's and don'ts, or by being a "basically good person." Instead, it is achieved by placing faith in Christ Jesus, and accepting His purely free gift of forgiveness and Heaven. In Romans 10:9 (if you have reached that portion of your Bible) Paul the apostle states, that if one will "confess with [their] mouth, 'Jesus is Lord,' and believe in [their] heart that God raised Him from the dead, [they] will be saved."

Now that we have established basic faith principles, I feel that what you have stated in your letter is in direct contrast to the very life of Jesus Christ, who is the foundation of Christian faith! In Genesis 3:16, God's ruling is in response to the sin of Adam and Eve. How conveniently you did not mention this! What is your response to Genesis 1:26-28? How about Genesis 2:23 or 5:1-2? Furthermore, when Jesus comes to earth in the New Testament, we are set free from the bondage of the law, and are liberated by grace!

Guardian readers hear this: The heart of God for women is freeing! Read John 8:1-11, Mark 16:1-8. Please do not believe the misinterpretation of Mr. Smith! It is not God's will for women to be oppressed and subordinated! It is His will to empower and liberate us!

If you are proclaiming that those who are treating women as equals are losing their eternal placement in heaven, then where do you stand on the treatment of women? Do you encourage oppression? Do you support the education of women? Do you feel that the mutilation of females worldwide is permissible, perhaps beneficial because for those women to retaliate would be for those women to cease in being subordinate to men? Or are you even familiar with any of these instances?

In closing I ask a final question: if a woman cannot find freedom and equality in the body of Christ, where is she to go to find it? Does it not exist for our gender? I beg of you to cease your proclamation of oppression, and the dimming of God's empowering light.

Other views on the Bible

Brian Kincaid

Having recently read the letter pertaining to Christianity and women's rights, I am rather appalled. It does not offend me that somebody has an opinion that opposes mine. That is part of living in America and part of life.

What disturbs me, for lack of a better word, is that there are people out there that are so narrow-minded that they believe that every person attending Wright State University, let alone everyone on earth, is a Christian.

Obviously there are other religions besides Christianity, but more importantly there are many different levels so to speak, of the religion. Not every person that believes in God has the same views, nor do they share the same beliefs of every person believing in God.

I personally believe in God, I feel that God Himself has helped me in many ways. I do not, however, feel that it was God's "way" to have an all powerful book written to rule the people of earth until the end of time. Not only do changes arise that are deserving of our acceptance, but also no specific founded on diversity—a celebrated diversity, with over 200 years of different races, different religions and different views, all living in one country.

With diversity comes certain controversies and problems, but that is apparent in any culture no matter how diverse. Whether these diversities be in religious views, cultural backgrounds, race, sex or economic upbringing; there is no set of rules that can govern all people of one culture, free or not.

It is apparent to me that this person, as well as many others in the religion, is trying to take the Bible to an extreme literal sense. However the Bible was not, in my opinion, intended to do such.

The Bible was, again, in my opinion, written for interpretation—to be taken by all who read it as they see fit, to inspire those believed to be uninspired and to lead those believed to be lost.

It was not, however, created to govern those of the Christian religion in a sense that they should feel they are sinners for giving women the same rights as men, or for fighting wars to defend a way of life, a loss of life, or simply because that is what they believe in.

Scene

Sex becomes a paradox in Cabaret

Jon Burns

Feature Writer

Sex is a tool. It can disgust us, entice us, draw us in or repel us. Sex makes us curious and hungry. It can be a bridge or a pitfall. At its basest point sex can embody so many different emotions: hatred, lust, love and humor, embarrassment or confidence, defeat or victory. To those that attended Springfield's Kuss Auditorium, on Feb. 11, sex was Cabaret.

It is the story of an English woman's love for an American writer, and the people that are thrown into and removed from her life, as she lives on the famous stages of Berlin's Kit Kat club. Her name is Sally Bowles, and she falls almost completely in love with Cliff Bradshaw Bradshaw is searching for a place that is suitable for writing. What he finds is the strain of a city, crumbling under the onslaught of the Third Reich, and a group of sexually deviant vagabonds, holding onto their freedom through the catalysts of free, random sex and stage performance.

Behind this mask of sexual misconduct is a group of diverse characters that see their own demise on the horizon. They are doing everything within their power to enjoy themselves, as their time may be limited.

What we get is a performance ripe with anxiety, humor and nervousness. Something looms beneath that candid mask of sex and mischief, and is always present, though not identifiable.

The majority of the musical takes place behind the doors of a hotel, owned by a person named Schultz, and on the stages of the Kit Kat club in downtown Berlin. Though Cliff Bradshaw is new to the city, he is adopted right away by Schultz's friend, and is introduced to the aging innkeeper, as he is in need of a room. It is through this acquaintance that Bradshaw meets Sally Bowles. At first he sees her as inspiration for his latest novel. What he ends up with is love, a love that is destined for catastrophe, as Bowles is a product of a stage built on a never-fleeting lust for freedom, a freedom that cannot be caged by love.

Parallel to Bradshaw's misguidance by Bowles are more relationships between many other people staying in Schultz's hotel, as even Schultz teeters on the discovery of love and companionship. Germans fall in love with Jews. The sexually clean fall for the sexually deviant. The prostitutes and strippers fall for men with stuffed wallets. It is a story built on attraction and companionship, whether for a life or just a night.

The winner of four 1998 Tony awards, including "Best Musical Revival," Cabaret details "the seedy glamour of the legendary Kit Kat Club," and entraps it audience with racy humor and drama. The music is almost legendary, as Cabaret "features some of the best-known songs in music theater history," including "Willkommen," "Tomorrow Belongs to Me," "Maybe This Time" and "Cabaret."

A note of special interest is Ryan Cutlip, who plays Cliff Bradshaw in this tour of Cabaret. He is a Wright State University graduate, and holds a B.F.A. in Musical Theater. Bradshaw does a marvelous job of portraying "the American" in the group. His performance is powerful, full of life and sincere.

Wheelie poppin', ear smashin' monster truck event at Hara

Justin Ling

Staff Writer

If you're prepared to have your masculinity tested for two hours straight, you'll definitely want to attend this weekend's Monster Truck Winter nationals at Hara Arena in Dayton presented by CFPracing.com.

It's going to be an ear bustin', wheelie poppin', car smashin', anti-priss bonanza on Feb. 21 at 7:30 pm and Feb. 22 at 2:00 pm and again at 7:30 pm. Grab your worn out bleacher seat cushions and head over to the Hara Arena for fun that's family oriented.

The event will thrill the midwestern audience with gravity defying, big air action, monster truck drag racing, tailpipe busting wheelie competition and pleasurable car crushing.

Let your heart skip a beat to match the clapping growls of Holman's Beast! Watch Maximum Torc crunch piles of cars without the assistance of a ramp! Brace yourself in your seats when Full Boar shakes the arena as it jets down the track in Monster Truck Drag Racing! Let After shock give you temporary hearing loss while your earplugs fall out from the rattling piston action! Be careful not to pass out when Monster Enforcer's impossibly enormous tires crush that '87 Oldsmobile that looks like your Aunt Cindy's!

Above all, however, don't spill your beers, fountain drinks or the condiments from your meat sandwich when the "king of the monster trucks," BIGFOOT rumbles into the spotlight and the other mechanical beasts bow down to its supremacy. Bigfoot will show you what it's like to rule the planet with traction grooves as thick as your hips.

Dayton's adrenaline pumping event also offers audience members the chance to see both professional and amateur competition in a few other areas. The ATV 4 wheel quad racing will have racers competing on jumps and tight turns for cash prizes and of course a fancy trophy. Anyone over 16 can enter.

The audience will also get the honorable opportunity to watch the Harley Davidson super pull championships in which the bikes will hook up to a weight transfer sled. Hear them rev up in those crunchy, signature blasts for side-by-side drag racing and super pull.

The final event will be the Tuff Truck Races where anyone 18 and over, with a license and a car or truck, can enter to navigate the fender throwing obstacle course against the clock. For more information on regulations and how to enter the competition, call the CFP office at 940-683-4742.

Advanced tickets for the event are on sale at the Hara Arena box office, Ticketmaster.com and all Ticketmaster outlets at the reasonable price of $5-$20, depending on day and age. Tickets will also be on sale at the venue the day of the show for anywhere from $7-$22, again depending on day and age.

Make sure you don't miss your unique opportunity to watch the satiating crushing of innocent cars by oversized tucks. Get your tickets for the Monster Truck Winter nationals today!

A chick flick for both the sexes

Jon Burns

Feature Writer

First, let's get something straight. A guy does not have to sacrifice his masculinity to get some entertainment out of a "chick flick." He may even get a few laughs along the way. Possibly even enjoy himself.

That said, I believe that everyone should make way to a cinema and watch How To Lose a Guy in 10 Days. It is a simple story with simple humor. Nothing complicated here. Just a good laugh.

It is the story of Andie Anderson, "How-To" columnist for Composure Magazine, and her ongoing search for a story worthy of her boss's respect. She is to meet a guy, get him interested, and then do everything that it is that girls do that drive men away. You know these things: moving into the bathroom, redecorating, calling constantly and stealing all of a guy's free time. For her story she will write an account of everything that goes on between her and the guy that she picks.

Enter Benjamin Barry, played by Matthew McConaughey. An ad rep for a New York advertising firm, Barry is quick witted, confident, and willing to do anything necessary to further his career. For Barry, nothing would be more satisfying than hooking the biggest opportunity that his firm has ever had. All he has to do is win a bit: find a woman, get her interested and get her to fall in love with him, in ten days.

What follows is a solid plot, supported by good humor. It's not "corny" humor, but jokes and events that are sincere and laughable. Anderson does all of those things that drive men crazy, while Barry does his best to hold onto his sanity.

Matthew McConaughey, who got his acting breakthrough with Joel Schumacher's A Time To Kill, needs no real introduction. Other movies to his credit include

Amistad and Contact, in which he played opposite Jodie Foster, and U-571 in which he starred with Bill Paxton.

Kate Hudson can be seen in her film debut, with Christina Ricci, in 200 Cigarettes, and in Almost Famous, for which she won a Golden Globe Award.

How To Lose A Guy In 10 Days has been rated PG-13. For more information, log onto www.howtoloseaguy-movie.com.

Artist's essence in current exhibit

Justin Ling

Staff Writer

Since the first week of February, the artistic works of a true Renaissance man, Reginald Harmon, have been on daily exhibition at the Riverbend Art Center in Dayton, Ohio.

Entitled The Essence of Art, Harmon's exhibit will encompass the essence of his many talents as a painter, sculptor, illustrator, screen printer, musician, songwriter, furniture designer and educator.

Marking his debut as a professional musician, Harmon released Follow the Light, his first jazz CD, in 2000. He also holds BA's in both Arts Education and Advertising and Design.

The display at Riverbend Art Center will include original furniture designs, paintings and sculpture, and it will be exhibited during gallery hours.

Gallery hours are from 9:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m., Monday through Thursday and Friday, 9:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. The exhibition is free of charge and open to the public.

This very special gallery will be exhibited through the end of February; so don't miss the chance to see the work of the multi-talented artist, Reginald Harmon.

You can't fight what you can't see

Justin Ling

Staff Writer

In the middle of last year, alternative rock veterans Girls Against Boys released You Can't Fight What You Can't See with Jadetree Records. It was their first full-length album since 1993.

The group formed back in 1990 from the remnants of the DC hardcore movement that boasted well-respected bands like Fugazi. Prior to signing on to the indie powerhouse label Jadetree Records, Girls Against Boys served up six albums on various labels like Touch & Go, Adult Swim and Geffen.

Venus Luxure No. 1 Baby was the first album under the name and current band line up. It was released on Touch & Go Records in 1994 and received much critical acclaim. The band became the center of label controversy and signed with Geffen Records to release their third and fourth album. Meanwhile, all of their records were doing quite well.

For their seventh album the band signed onto the underground Jadetree Records label, giving them a new freedom of sound. The outcome was an album with the irony of an impressionable band in both the music and lyrics.

The album begins on a disappointment note with the new metal riffs of "Basstation." It has this scary metal grind to it with poppy, corporate-scented choruses. Reminiscent of Bush, even with Scott McCloud's raspy, cool vocals, the CD gives off a major record company air. The album is a quite uncommon sound to be coming from the Jadetree arsenal, but who could put it past the genre-blending label? They do happen to carry a variety of bands from the wintery hums of Denali to the bizarre mishaps of Owls.

Any CD with a song called "BFF" is just setting itself up to be mocked anyway. The song has McCloud repetitively proclaiming, "It's great to be a rock and roll star," almost putting forth a vicious satire of themselves. "BFF" is an abbreviation for middle school note passers and not typical of any good album.

The very structure of the songs hints at some tension between a pop sensibility and an attempt to bring back what was so revolutionary about the early 90's alternative rock movement. But who wants to be reminded of that depressing rock era anyway? Songs like "Miami Skyline" and "Basstation" tell the tale of the tug-of-war of that corporate pop sound that turned many fans off in the later albums and the desire to take the music back to the simpler and earlier years of that true alternative rock.

Girls Against Boys comes off like a clean, more organized sonic youth or a darker version of 90's radio favorite, Bush on this latest release. The confusing comparison comes from the continuous sound tensions built up to a crescendo by the end of the album.

McCloud just sounds like a rock star while he powers through his lines and horns out heavy guitar solos that get more intense as the record progresses. I can almost imagine him pulling Steven Tyler poses through the stereo and getting down on one knee too.

There's no doubt that You Can't Fight What You Can't See is a genuine rock album. While the heavy guitar and dark melodies propel the songs, elementary pop sections built in give it a more favorable taste.

The overall impact is less than gratifying, and the purpose and vigor is nearly pretentious in presentation. Once Girls Against Boys learns to manage their new freedom, I'm confident that we can look forward to a solid release from this group.

Stephen Blake's Take on Long-Distance Relationships

Jon Burns

Staff Writer

There are more than ten million couples right now, worldwide, that are coping with the stress of long-distance relationships. Whether they are "commuter marriages, bicoastal romances, or long-distance internet romances," sometimes people need help keeping their love together.

Author Stephen Blake has a solution for those of you that must dial a different area code when calling on your love. Long Distance Relationships: How Couples Can Make It Work, is a book on just such relationships, for "all across the world," according to Blake, "there are Romeos and Juliets who are crazy about each other but are forced, by circumstance, to live apart."

To help couples "stay together" while they are "apart," Blake details the growing trends behind lovers separation, the "fascinating stories of people living apart," "how to say good-bye again and again" and "the keys to preventing phone arguments." The most common question people ask Blake is: "Do long-distance relationships work?" or "I feel like my heart is breaking... is this normal?... Can I make it through this experience?" The answers to these questions, Blake continues are "yes, you can." He feels that a relationship that is based on trust, respect, commitment and love cannot be hurt by distance. Blake says that the heart must be trusted in times of lost faith, as relationships, especially those that are worth preserving, are what make life special.

Blake has authored other books on the subject of long-distance relationship: Loving Your Long-Distance Relationship, Still Loving Your Long-Distance Relationship and Loving Your Long-Distance Relationships for Women, are all titles that have put Blake at the forefront of relationship literature. He has appeared in numerous newspaper columns, radio and TV talk shows, and maintains a website dedicated to preserving the long-distance relationship.

The information in Blake's books, however, does not come from speculation. Talking to Blake, one is impressed with the fact that he speaks from personal experience. His books come from his "high school and university days," when he was involved in many of these long-distance relationships. He began writing in his early 20's, when he realized that there was no literature written on the situations that he was living through. "There are millions of college kids that are involved in long-distance relationships," Blake says. "These books can help them hold on to the people that mean the most to them." Blake continues, "I hope that 'university' will relate to it perfectly. Most of the stories in the book are from a college perspective."

For those of you who want more information on Stephen Blake and his self-help literature, log onto www.sblake.com. You can order books, read reviews or simply hellos to friends. Books are published by Anton Publishing Inc., and are available in all major bookstores.

Gypsy Camp; more than a cup of joe

Jon Burns

Feature Writer

Steve and Rose Fryburg want you to do more than drink coffee when you visit The Gypsy Camp Coffee House. They want you to "come together, to share your thoughts." Since the 16th century, coffee houses have been places for people to gather and share their fellowship. They have been camps, for one to come and be with friends.

That is exactly what The Gypsy Camp is meant to be. This is where it gets its name. Yet, there is more to it than just coffee. The Fryburgs have provided a menu of edibles to compliment the coffee that they serve, including New York style cheesecake, Biscotti, cookies and bagels, as well as protein shakes and hot pretzels. The Camp's menu also offers chocolate covered espresso beans and chocolate truffles.

Available coffees are as unique as the shops name. Choices you will find on the menu include: Guatemala, Indonesia, Sumatra, Indian Malabar Gold, Ethiopian Long Berry Harrar, Peru La Floridian, Uganda Bugishu AA, Papua New Guinea and Nicaraguan Big Bean. These are not just coffees for those needing caffeine; they are for connoisseurs and aficionados.

Yet Gypsy Camp goes beyond simply serving coffee. There is also the "Gypsy Camp Crier," a bulletin of events and specials. Patrons and students are welcome to post event calendars, sayings or simply hellos to friends. The Camp also supports, by website, an open forum for posted poetry and thoughts. Students are free to post poetry, sayings and any other verse that they feel they would like to be public.

The Gypsy Camp is located at 2100 Zinc Road, in the new Wright State University Honors Hall. They are open Monday through Friday, from 10am to 10pm, and on Sunday from 12am to 10pm. ## WSU's Webb: a local product

Trent Montgomery

Staff Writer

Tiffany Webb played her high school basketball games only minutes away from the Nutter Center. Webb, now a sophomore on the Wright State women's basketball team, came from Beavercreek High School. Since coming to WSU, Webb has been making a name for herself as one of the best Raiders to ever step on the hardwood. Starting her freshman year she gained recognition from not only her teammates, but also her opponents. Putting up great numbers and starting for the Raiders in her first year is not something you see a lot of in Division I programs. But it has been her 2002-2003 season that has had many people talking.

Since the beginning of this season Webb has established herself as the Raiders go-to player, averaging 24.3 points a game; she not only leads her team but leads the conference in scoring. Webb even broke a school and conference record in January when she put up 49 points in a win against Butler. Besides putting up points, she leads her team in steals and is second on the team in rebounds and blocks. Not bad numbers, but the question is what sets her aside from the rest?

For starters we go back to Beavercreek High school where Webb played her high school ball. Beavercreek is regarded as one of the state's finest girls' basketball programs and consistently puts together championship caliber teams every year. Coming from such a program would most likely help ease the transition from high school to the college level, because for most college athletes the hardest thing for them to get used to is the intensity, and the day in and day out competitive nature. Webb echoed these very thoughts, "Coming from a program that sets such high standards and puts such an emphasis on success really helped with the transition to the college level of play." This was no more evident than in her first year as a Raider when she was able to come in and make an impact in her first season of play.

A lot has changed since last year though and Webb has managed to turn herself into an even better player. She credits a lot of her improvement to the work she put in over the summer. "All the girls were down here in Dayton and we got the chance to play together a lot this summer, on top of that I tried to work on my outside shot so that I wasn't just one dimensional, and I really worked hard on trying to become a creator so that teams weren't just trying to stop one person, but instead they would have to worry about all five." It is this type of demeanor that makes Webb the all-around player that she has become. Working hard is something she prides herself on and really considers it a leadership quality. "I try to lead by example," Webb explained. "If my teammates see me working hard or playing well, it just makes them step up their play that much more."

This season has not been all wins for the Raiders as they faced a tough schedule, and the lady Raiders really struggled. After the first month of play the Raiders record was a dismal 2-10 thanks to the likes of teams such as UCONN and Minnesota to name a few. During that month Webb said she grew a lot stronger. "It was hard at times because I would play well, and we weren't winning, but I knew if I could score 16 against a team such as UCONN I could certainly do even better against a team in the conference." Since January it has been a bit of a different story and the team has managed to get things together, pulling their overall record to 8-14. Webb said that a big reason the team has been playing better is team unity. "After a rough start the team really started to come together. We had a lot of younger players who needed to learn the system and once we got things turned around, it was a lot easier because with each win the team plays with a little more confidence."

So with only a small remainder of their regular season schedule remaining, the lady Raiders will be starting to set their sights on the all important Horizon league tournament, with the hopes of landing an at large bid for the NCAA tournament. One thing is for sure though: Tiffany Webb has made more than just a name for herself this year, and with two more years of eligibility remaining, there is no telling just how much better she will get.

Doliboa drops 38 on Vikings

Matt Koehler

Sports Editor

Junior forward Seth Doliboa scored a career-high 38 points last Saturday night in the Nutter Center as the Raiders ended a three-game losing streak with a 76-63 win over Cleveland State.

Doliboa was on target, shooting 16-for-28 from the field including 3-of-6 from beyond the arc. Seth also added 11 rebounds to his performance giving the first team all-leaguer a double-double.

"He is a very very good basketball player. He really knows how to play the game," Cleveland State head coach Rollie Massimino said.

Doliboa's counterpart, senior point guard Vernard Hollins, played one of his best games of the season scoring 20 points and dishing seven assists. More impressively was Hollins' decision-making. Hollins had his WSU offense running like a well-oiled machine midway through the second half when Wright State put the game out of reach. Hollins created scoring opportunities for both himself and his teammates with his dribble penetration.

The Raiders also put out one of their best defensive efforts of the season, forcing 15 CSU turnovers, while WSU had just seven. Wright State played defense with their hands up and forcing tipped passes that led to steals.

Cleveland State's Percell Coles started out the game on fire, hitting three of his first four three-pointers, en route to scorching the nets with 13 points in the games first ten minutes. Coach Schilling then assigned senior guard Tyson Freeman, WSU's best defender, to Coles. Freeman silenced Coles for the rest of the night as he only managed five second half points.

Senior center Thomas Hope played a pivotal role in the Raiders defensive uprising in the second half. Hope had three steals in the second half along with ten defensive rebounds.

The Raiders took over midway through the second half. After a dunk by CSU center Pape Badiane, tying the score at 47 with 14 minutes to play, Hollins and Doliboa got the pick and roll game going offensively as the Raiders outscored the Vikings 29-16 the rest of the game.

See DOLIBOA | Page 18

WSU's Seth Doliboa had completed 16 of 28 shots and backed up 11 solid rebounds to lead the Raiders over the Vikings, 76 to 63.

The wild world of sports

Commentary
By Justin Ross

Staff Writer

You want to know why I like sports? It's not the team, the city, or the distraction from every day life. Sports, to me, is just a clever insight into human existence. It is a look at all the funny things in our unusual society that manifest themselves when people get to the height of your emotions.

Believe it or not, I could care less about who will benefit from weather factors at the next Daytona 500. I am not interested in some redneck driving 500 miles in a circle. I could sit on an overpass of I-675 and get the same effect. I like the fact that despite all the drunk driving campaigns you see, we still accept the site of a car supported by beer companies as it dangerously maneuvers turns.

Soccer games are another wonderful thing. Here is the only major sport I can think of that every country, regardless of conflicting politics, can play together. Where else are you going to see Argentina and Guam vie for a world title. You would think that this type of event would be a peace-maker of sorts, but its not. No. No. No, in the stands are thousands of people trying to kill the person next to them with the biggest piece of their seat they could break off. Who would have thought a tie-game would result in chaos and violence that makes the WWF blush?

You can't even think about boxing without thinking of my personal hero, Mike Tyson. Good ole Mike Tyson. Our violent society encourages such raw emotion and hate for 15-3 minute rounds and expect him to be easy going the rest of the time, if not, surely prison would teach him how to calm down. Instead we get Mike Tyson being Mike Tyson around the clock, and he won't let you forget it. Admit it, you were excited by the fact that this guy actually might bite the ear off of Lennox Lewis. In other Tyson news, despite the lure of a big paycheck, he will not fight in June because he is only training twice a week and didn't realize he wouldn't be competition worthy with a fresh new tattoo on his face.

Professional baseball: America's favorite pastime. Lazy degenerates with a double-digit IQ always going on strike for more money- definitely America's past time. They are lucky anyone watches at all. I love to play the game, but watching it is like trying to see how far that screw driver will go up your nose. Here is a game where one of the most exciting things that can happen is that throughout the entire contest, absolutely nothing happens. It is called a no-hitter, exciting stuff, pass me the Phillips.

Baseball team to begin season this week

Trent Montgomery

Staff Writer

With snow on the ground baseball is the farthest thing from anyone's mind right now, but in fact the Wright State baseball team is already gearing up for its 2003 campaign. The Raiders first game is right around the corner with a road trip to Western Carolina coming up at the end of this week. The team will play games on the 22nd and the 23rd. So with the season here and the first game so close it is time to take a look at just what the Raiders are looking forward to during the upcoming season.

For starters the team is coming off of a somewhat disappointing 20-33 overall record from last year. The squad went 9-14 in conference play, good enough for a dismal sixth place in Horizon League play. However the 20 win season of mark the 25th time head coach Ron Nischwitz had reached the 20 win mark in his 28 year tenure with the Raiders. According to the Horizon League baseball preseason standings the Raiders are picked to place sixth again behind two time defending conference tournament champion UW-Milwaukee. The Raiders are hoping to put their unlucky selection behind them and turn some heads by making fools of their conference foes.

To do so the Raiders are going to have to look to some of their returning starters, which is something they have plenty of. Starting in the outfield the team returns a pair of experienced upperclassmen seniors Kofi Gyimah and Chris Tuttle (2001 NCAA Batting Champion). Also returning to the outfield is senior Chris Ranstead. In the infield starter Trent Matthews returns along with sophomores Brandon Osborne and Ty Brown, both of which saw time last year. Rounding out the returning infielders will be junior Matt Barhorst. Behind the plate the Raiders will look to sophomore Bryan Vickers who got a lot of experience last year. On the mound the team looks to be strong with lots of returnees including, right handed juniors Kyle Young, Kevin Kuntz, J.P. Jung and sophomore Matt Crawford. Along with a pair of lefties, juniors Casey Abrams and Aaron Braden which help round out the returning staff. Along with the upperclassmen the team has brought in an array of freshmen adding 13 new players to the roster. With the experienced and new talent the team will be looking to make some noise from the start.

From the teams point of view they are set and ready to go. Sophomore Matt Crawford said, "The guys are ready to get this season underway. We have been inside a lot this winter and it will be nice to get out on a diamond and play some real ball. I think everyone is positive and has the right mind set going into the season." So with the team hitting the road this coming weekend it will be a start to what hopes to be a memorable and successful season.

Women fall to Cleveland State

Matt Koehler

Sports Editor

The Wright State women's basketball team lost 79-58 Saturday afternoon at Goodman Arena to the Vikings of Cleveland State.

It was a closely contested battle in the early going for both teams as the Vikings led the Raiders 20-19 with just over eleven minutes left to play in the first half.

The wheels fell off for Wright State at that point as Cleveland State went on a 20-10 run to end the first half with a 40-29 lead.

The Vikings came out of the gates in the second half on fire scoring the first 14 points in the first five minutes of the half putting the game out of reach at 54-29.

Sophomore guard Jill Randsell put a season-high 12 points for the Raiders while freshman guard Rhea Mays netted eleven point coming off the bench.

The Cleveland State defense along with a cold shooting hand silenced Raider star, sophomore guard Tiffany Webb for much of the day. Webb was held to just 14 points on 5-of-21 shooting in the game, ten points below her scoring average on the season. Webb and the rest of the team shot a dismal 32 percent from the field in the game, while Cleveland State shot 44 percent from the field, including 47 percent shooting in the second half.

Justin Gorman | The Guardian

Sophomore guard, Jill Randsell, runs the Raider offense.

Pacing the Vikings (8-15, 6-7) was Erica Roudebush with 21 points along with a super performance by Ashley Schrock who recorded her second straight triple-double. Schrock had 13 points, 13 boards, and ten assists and became the first player in school history to record a triple-double in consecutive games.

With the loss, Wright State falls to 8-14 overall and 5-6 in conference play. The Raiders look to pick up some momentum as they come for a three-game homestand. The Raiders pick up against Butler Thursday night at 7 pm and host Youngstown State next Monday night at 7 pm.

Coach Schilling also got productive play out of junior forward Trent Vaughn. Vaughn's steady improvement over the last few games earned him a starting role against CSU. Vaughn played up to starter expectations contributing ten points. He got the Raiders started early in the game with several put-back lay-ups on the offensive glass. The Raiders starting five pounded hard in the paint all night long with the Vikings. Despite being outsize, the Raiders outscored CSU 34-

18 and also won the battle of the boards, 34-33.

Earlier last week, Wright State suffered a tough loss to Detroit on the road. The Titans senior guard Willie Green was a handful as he lit up the Raiders with 41 points.

Despite leading by eight points early and going into half-time with a 35-32 advantage, the Raiders were unable to close the deal. Hollins led the Raiders with 18 points, while Doliboa was held to just eleven points due to sitting out much of the first half with foul trouble.

The win against Cleveland State brings the Raiders record to 9-14 overall with a 3-10 mark in conference play.

"We just came out and had fun. We had nothing to lose. We're in the bottom of the barrel, which we shouldn't be, but we had fun," Doliboa said.

Although the win did not raise WSU out of the Horizon League cellar, it did draw the ninth place Raiders within one game of sixth place in the conference. With three conference games to go, sixth place in the conference is what WSU along with UW-Green Bay, CSU and Youngstown State are shooting for as it represents the last conference tournament seed to host an all-important first round game. Wright State coach Ed Schilling is looking to guide his team to a strong regular season finish in order to capture that first round bye and get some momentum going into the tournament.

"These guys have continued to compete. They fought hard and you can't count these guys out," Schilling said.

Up next for the Raiders is a tall order in the likes of conference powerhouse Butler. Having had since Sunday to prepare for the Bulldogs, Wright State looks to travel to Indianapolis and steal a win much like they did last winter when WSU stormed into the time undefeated nationally ranked Butler. The game is Thursday. The Raiders then travel to Wayne, Indiana on Saturday with a nonconference contest against IP-Fort Wayne at 1 pm.
